[1] Only include the original publication detail, not, e.g., reprint in a later volume.

[2] Level refers to the level at which the reading can be presented. Note that this list is restricted to core readings for undergraduate teaching only. "Introductory" are papers that can be read by students with no foreknowledge in the area. "Intermediate" requires some background knowledge, e.g., a few introductory classes introducing the concept. "Advanced" are readings that require at extensive background knowledge (e.g., a specialized paper philosophy of biology, which requires already knowledge of general philosophy of science).

[3] Only provide the original year of publication, not, for instance, the year in which a paper was reprinted in an edited volume.

[4] Provide a concise description of the area of research. Use broader categories (e.g., philosophy of science) rather than narrower categories (e.g., philosophy of biology).
